AT&T's (T) Warner Media is close to a deal with the cast members of the hit TV show 'Friends' to film a reunion special, according to a report from the Wall Street Journal. Each of the show's six main stars would be paid between $2.25 million and $2.5 million to appear in the special and the show would likely be used to launch HBO Max, the company's new streaming service debuting in May, the Journal reported, citing people familiar with the matter. The show wouldn't be a new episode of the show but a retrospective with interviews with the cast and creators. The high cost of the special shows how competitive the streaming video space has become and how important it is to offer exclusive and compelling content. HBO Max will already be launching with access to all 10 seasons of the hit show, which had previously been held by Netflix through the end of 2019. AT&T's WarnerMedia outbid Netflix (NFLX) for the streaming rights, however, and will be paying $425 million for five years of access. HBO Max will be free for current HBO subscribers but will cost $14.99 per month for new subscribers. In addition to competition from Netflix and Amazon (AMZN) Prime, Disney (DIS) and Apple's (AAPL) streaming services debuted in November and Comcast's (CMCSA) Peacock is set to launch in July. Amazon, Disney, Apple and Comcast are holdings in Jim Cramer's Action Alerts PLUS Charitable Trust Portfolio. Want to be alerted before Cramer buys or sells these stocks? Learn more now. Friends: The Reunion is streaming now on HBO Max, and fans of the beloved sitcom are feeling all the emotions seeing the famous six come back together on that iconic orange couch. The reunion special has plenty of great segments. So many in fact that we ranked our favorite moments (and a couple we didn't like so much), but one of the most surprising things about the feature-length show was all the new information stuffed within its runtime. Sure, we already knew that the initial pitch for the show was "a sitcom focused on the period of your life where your friends are your family." Likewise, the cast's musings on where each character would be now didn't exactly turn up many surprises — though we did like Matt LeBlanc claiming that Joey would own a sandwich shop by the beach (even he knew the whole being an actor in LA thing wouldn't pan out!). However, there were also several revelations that we didn't see coming and even a few tidbits that hardcore fans who can recite each episode front and back were shocked to learn. So, we've rounded up the biggest talking points from Friends: The Reunion. David Schwimmer really, really didn't like Marcel! "It was time for Marcel to f*ck off" was perhaps the quote of the entire show, as David Schwimmer revealed that working with Marcel, the capuchin monkey, in the first series of Friends was not a fun experience for the actor. (Image credit: HBO Max) Schwimmer had recently come from a stint in the theatre before Friends, so working alongside a Monkey was probably not what he envisaged for his first major role on network television. While Ross was devastated after making the difficult decision to give his primate companion up for adoption to a zoo, Schwimmer was clearly very relieved. They do say never work with children or animals. Monica's lines were on the table if you've ever wondered how actors memorize so many lines, the answer is they don't. One of the first revelations of the Friends Reunion was that Courtney Cox used to hide her script pages around the apartment set in case she couldn't recall a gag. (Image credit: HBO Max) Upon first walking onto the rebuilt apartment Matt LeBlanc's first move was to quickly check under the fruit bowl to see if "Courtney still has her lines written under the table". It was a hilarious moment, and just one of the many insights into the day-to-day routine of the cast while shooting the show. At the time of being cast in Friends as runaway bride Rachel Greene, Jennifer Aniston was actually already booked to appear in another show CBS's Mudding Through. Due to contractual commitments if that show had taken off Aniston would have had to drop out of Friends. (Image credit: HBO Max) NBC execs, not wanting anyone else for the part, planned a crafty move to ensure that Aniston wouldn't have to leave the Central Perk six. During the summer that Mudding Through premiered the network scheduled blockbuster movies at the same time in order to tank the show's rating and ultimately lead to its cancellation. The plans worked. Mudding Through only lasted nine episodes and the producer of the ill-fated sitcom told Aniston that Friends wouldn't ever make her a star. Yikes! Ross really crushed on Rachel in real life — and vice versa! This juicy revelation has caused something of an internet meltdown, as David Schwimmer revealed that during the filming of the show he had genuine romantic feelings for Jennifer Aniston. And she had reciprocal feelings. Ross and Rachel were (and arguably still are) the ultimate will they/won't they television couple, so finding out the actors behind the iconic pairing were actually crushing on each other the whole time has floored Friends fans. (Image credit: HBO Max) Unfortunately, bad timing meant that Schwimmer and Aniston never got together in real life, though Matt LeBlanc jokingly hinted that they may have at least shared some form of a romantic encounter in the show's heyday. Is it too late for us to re-build that ship anyway? How Matt LeBlanc really broke his arm Remember the season 3 episode "The One With the Jam", where Joey gets his arm in a sling after taking a tumble while bouncing on his bed? If you've ever wondered why the writer crafted that scenario then never did anything with it, it's because it was a cover for a real injury that Matt LeBlanc sustained on the set during the filming of the fan-favorite episode "The One Where No One's Ready". LeBlanc had to dive into an armchair and during this stunt, he tripped and dislocated his shoulder in front of the studio audience. The squeam-inducing footage was shown during the Friends Reunion and all credit to LeBlanc for soldiering to film the next episode while injured. We assume he requested a stuntman in later seasons. Read next: Everything we know about Yellowstone season 4 HBO Max's Friends Reunion was one of its biggest announcements when the streaming service first announced. And now we're finally going to get it, on May 27 — and I am already sure I'm going to hate-watch it. I loved Friends when it was the pillar of NBC's Must See TV lineup. I've been that guy who claimed (incorrectly) that it was better than Seinfeld. I actually cared about Ross and Rachel's on-and-off-and-on relationship. I was giddy when Chandler and Monica finally made it happen. I even did that thing where Ross and Monica would knock two fists against each other, their own version of giving the middle finger. I think Joey's dissection of Rachel's trifle is perfect. But then I actually learned about it. And I practically did the knocked-fists salute at my monitor. The Friends reunion has too many friends of friends. Per The Hollywood Reporter (opens in new tab), The Friends Reunion will feature the following actors (in alphabetical order): David Beckham, Justin Bieber, BTS, James Corden, Cindy Crawford, Cara Delevingne, Lady Gaga, Elliott Gould, Kit Harrington, Larry Hankin, Mandy Patinkin, Thomas Lennon, Christina Pickles, Tom Selleck, James Michael Tyler, Maggie Wheeler, Reese Witherspoon, Malala Yousafzai. And before I get to the obvious names that do not belong, let's look at who does belong here. Cindy Crawford, shockingly, does — she was on Chandler's list of the five celebrities on his "freebies" list. Elliott Gould and Christina Pickles, of course, played Jack and Judy Geller, the parents of Monica and Rachel, who lived downstairs and was upset about all the noise. Thomas Lennon (of Reno 911!) is an even deeper cut: he played Joey's "identical hand twin" in the season five finale. Tom Selleck played Dr. Richard Burke, who dated Monica — and didn't want to have kids with her. James Michael Tyler was Gunther, Rachel's boss at the Central Perk coffee house. You may know Maggie Wheeler's laugh better than her name, as she played Janice, Chandler's on-and-off love interest. And, lastly, Reese Witherspoon was Rachel's sister, Jill Greene. What's wrong with the Friends Reunion specials are rarely fantastic entertainment, such as The West Wing reunion where the cast reenacted an episode, so we kind of need to lower our standards already. What we know about the Friends episode is simple: the main six stars will reprise their roles for part of this new "special" episode — but the rest of the project will consist of the actors being themselves. That just sounds ... light on content, but let's move on to the big issue. The list of Friends Reunion guests is littered with names that don't make sense — starting with people who are too young to be relevant for this reunion. Justin Bieber (who was born on March 1, 1994) was only ten when the show went off the air on May 6, 2004. How does he have any connection to the series? Anyone who binge-watched the show has as close a connection as he does. The eldest member of mega-popular K-Pop band BTS (Kim Seokjin, born Dec. 4, 1992)

would have been 11 when the lights went out at Central Perk. Nobel Prize laureate Malala Yousafzai (born July 12, 1997) may be a prestigious name, but she's even younger, and would have been 6 when the show ended. I get that these are all big stars, and they could help the special draw younger eyes, but wasn't this long-awaited reunion big enough? More confusing are the folks that don't seem to have any real reason, other than being famous. James Corden, for example, is just one of the many celebrities who is best known for his ubiquity. I'm not against the man making money, but his mere presence is a sign that any random celebrity is welcome. Lady Gaga and Mindy Kaling are great and fun, but — again — nope, no relation to the show, does not belong. We don't know why David Beckham is on this list, either, outside of that time he was photographed wearing a Friends shirt. The Friends Reunion is missing real stars like Mike Hannigan Does the name Mike Hannigan not ring a bell? If so, then you owe Paul Rudd an apology, as his work playing Hannigan, Phoebe Buffay's third husband, helped make the later Friends seasons watchable. The big list of huge guest stars missing from the Reunion is its own separate story, but let's just remember that Julia Roberts, Jean Claude Van Damme, Isabella Rossellini, Christina Applegate, Billy Crystal, Helen Hunt and Winona Ryder could all have been invited. Heck, comedy icon Danny DeVito should be here, because he should be everywhere. Of course, I know we're not going to get Brad Pitt to reprise the role of Will Colbert — there's too much history with him and Jennifer Aniston. Similarly, Aisha Tyler is probably not coming back due to her issues with show co-creator Marta Kauffman stemming from Friends' melanin deficiency. Oh, and the list goes on. Why can't we get George Clooney, who also guest-starred on the show? Giovanni Ribisi, Morgan Fairchild and Kathleen Turner are also among the names we wish were on this list. Maybe these big names will be the big surprises that HBO Max doesn't want to spoil. Either way, Friends Reunion? We're on a break, effective now.
